The Los Alamos National Laboratory Foundation has provided generous support in producing these Modules, and we're tremendously grateful to them. The lead author of these modules, Jacqueline Frank, dedicated exceptional amounts of time and effort in this project, and to her tireless resolve we are hugely grateful. We are also deeply appreciative of the contributions of Tacarra Lake (CIR's Director of Education) and Pamela Pereyra, Founder and Director of Media Savvy Citizens, for her outstanding guidance and feedback.

And lastly, we're extremely grateful for the many individual donors to Journalism under Fire; your support for each year's conference has allowed us to engage students and journalists from across the state and beyond, which is crucial to the conference's success. If holding a newspaper is indeed holding democracy in our hands, by supporting the conference you have all played an essential role in strengthening our free press and, ultimately, our democracy.

Santa Fe Council
ON INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

WELCOME

Welcome to the fourth and final News Literacy Module, the first production of CIR's new Idea Incubator. In offering our global Journalism under Fire conference in 2018 and 2019, we learned that many of our attending students simply needed more background, more baseline information to be dynamic participants. With support from the Los Alamos National Laboratory Foundation, we're proud to unveil these four modules. Each may be read and studied independently, or as a concurrent whole.

In this module, you'll find all kinds of information about our speakers, including their recent articles, web resources, and of course their many prizes! We're thrilled to have twelve Pulitzer Prize-winning speakers at Journalism under Fire, and see this compendium as an invaluable way to prepare for their presentations. We believe interaction with the speakers through outstanding questions is a unique and important step to engaging with their work.

As always, we welcome your feedback (drop a line to evaluation@sfcir.org) to help us improve these modules. We will continue sharpening them for the years to come, and truly see this as an essential project with limitless opportunities.

I also want to extend my full appreciation to Jacqueline Frank for her tireless efforts in creating, shaping, and reshaping the content within. Thank you so much, Jackie!!

NextGenNews

THERE ARE FOUR NEWS LITERACY MODULES IN TOTAL.

- * Module One. NextGenNews. An Introduction.
- * Module Two. Modern Media: Pressures and Opportunities
- * Module Three. Imagery and Photos
- * Module Four. A Journalism under Fire Compendium

NextGenNews

The overall objective of these modules is to boost student understanding and engagement with the news media. Specifically, this includes an understanding of:

- the many facets of modern journalism
- the pressures on journalism, including the introduction of bias and the persecution of journalists
- the role of imagery in journalism
- how technology has changed journalism
- how to distinguish between fact and opinion.

As we are living through a particularly newsworthy and historic moment, it has become ever more important for students, and the rest of us, to have the means to understand, analyze, and dissect the streams of information coming to us every day. Whether it is news, photos, or videos, available in print, on air, on social media sites or on the web, we all require sharpened tools to engage with this stream of information – particularly in separating the real information from the questionable.

The modules can be completed as a whole in sequence or can be done individually according to student interest and time. Each module features handouts, links, and fun quizzes. The modules are designed either for an educator's lead, or for participants and students to use independently. All modules are available at no cost on CIR's website: www.sfcir.org/newsliteracy and at www.journalismunderfire.org/students.
